

The Newest Cape and Kindred Wraps

ASUNSMONTHLY issue of capes, cloaks, collars, and collars. The Carmelita is one of the prettiest styles. It is made of a light green jersey or more or less like a muslin, even though we see it on the eve of summer. It has a mother-of-pearl-like finish to the model, and a wide band of lace at the neck, having no belt during rains or sunshower. These red feathers or clusters of roses appear as trimmings for the collar and for the waist. Indeed, the gaudy colors may themselves be used for winter or fall, too.

These dresses can be combined, for many purposes of wear, with pastel-colored and also for dresses patterned that may be better suited than to the color of the dress itself. They are being worn with gay hats.

There is nothing so becoming as a light-colored and ethereal cape, such as the "Golfini," which looks like a cloud of clouds. It is made of a light blue silk crepe, with a lace border at the waist, and a belt of lace. The blouse is the addition of a wide, lace-trimmed belt, and a long, full skirt, and a half-length bolero. The belt with a belt, however, all around the waist.

and up in attractive models similar to those ornate, cotton tulle and batik-like capes shown on this page. This is a short, more or less for dinner attire.

From across the sea comes report that these are being much used by the nobility.

Costume novelties of Paris. Many beatiful dresses and garments are here, such as

"costume" dresses from its collection of the year before. White and black silks, satin, and velvet, with lace borders and other ornaments are high and fancy dresses.

White French roses and tulips and even acrobats, when you see the smart, new

the other less expensive gown.

8232 - Smart Outing Wrap of Golfini.

7190 - Linen Auto-Coat With Roman Stripe Lining.

TIS a long time since a "Sunday" wrap, and one "everyday" is sufficient for all needs of the well-dressed woman when she walks abroad. To-day her wardrobe includes a variety of accessories of one kind or another than street dresses. Fashion and the demand for variety have increased the desire for the appropriate garment for all occasions. It is quite possible to have many of these attractive and useful wraps, of which the modiste is the leader at the present, even though one cannot afford to buy them ready-made. They are made in the strictly tailored type, unless it is the invisible Balmacaan, such as shown on this page (8220), as the accompaniment of an equine mount. English tweeds and Scotch mixtures are making in this style of coat, which will do duty for steamer and auto travel, mountain wear, etc., when warmth is required. Materials such as these mentioned, which need no ironing, can be laid up at home by anyone who is experienced in smooth finishing of seams and edges.

The sports-coats of golfini are created set alone for their own beauty of fabric, but to introduce the fashionably bright color which fashion revels in just now. Tan, burnt orange, drift blue, cotton green, copper and rose shades are pretty sure to be becoming, and they do look well in the outdoor setting of a golf links, or a tennis club porch.

No. 8220 is a garment to be liked in color and of green golfini—the material with a thin ground, and the like color. The back is cut to extend over the front with a ruched effect there, and a cut belt holds in the sharpless full back.

Dressy Afternoon Coats

With Circular Flounces

A dressy afternoon or carriage wrap that is taking especially well in the ready-made stocks of city shops is model No. 8270, shown at the left of this page near the bottom. This has a circular graduated flounce, which ripples around the bottom in a graceful line. The upper part is cut with ruched shoulders. Blue and black marlasse is the material, so elegant in itself as to need no other trimming than the black-covered cord at the top of the flounce, and a lining of peacock blue chiffon cloth. The flaring collar may be of white moiré to be extremely modest.

There is an attractive line of linen coats for automobile and other outdoor wear, when some wrap is needed for protection from dust, rather than for warmth. The model shown in the upper right corner is of oyster white linen, lined with a Roman stripe cotton crépe, and having a half belt and collar of black satin. By removing the collar this practical coat may be cleaned in the wash tub. It has wide revers which may also be buttoned over snugly in the neck. The model could be copied in a full-length garment if preferred. Tan linen or pongee is liked for this kind of summer utility coat. Taftas of the chiffon weave is liked by smart dressers for such coats as these, and the navy blue color which has been so fashionable since early spring is frequently selected for this coat, as well as for the dressy half length coat mentioned. For the latter, black moiré or black taffeta will be much in evidence; and now that Paris sends word that lace coats are again coming into prominence, this model will doubtless be one of the favorites for them, with silk or chiffon cloth lining.

Crocheted Bag to Carry
with Summer Frocks

Crocheted Handbag

In lieu of stiff and dark leather handbags, something daintier is prescribed for carrying with summer dresses and wash suits. The bag shown on this page is a suggestion for one which may be easily crocheted of linen thread or cordette, in white or cream, and lined with soft silk in some plain color, or with flowered ribbon. The latter is a new art design full in with this season's riot of color for women's dress—a pleasing idea when all nature is gay with bright flowers and foliage.

Stuffed Tomatoes

A delicious dish for summer luncheons is stuffed tomatoes. Remove the pulp with a sharp knife from as many tomatoes as will be needed. Mince either one cup of cold meat, ham, veal or chicken with one-half of bread crumbs, and one cup of mushrooms, previously soaked, if the canned variety is not used. Season with salt, onion juice and paprika. Add melted butter and the tomato pulp. Fill the tomato cups and bake twenty minutes. Garnish with parsley. These may be served on toast.

Creamed Chicken

Make a white sauce with stock or milk and add chicken gravy. Mince an small or large pieces of cold chicken, and put it into the sauce to heat. Serve on toast with slices of green pimento, and the whites and yolks of three hard boiled eggs chopped separately. Put the white around the edge of the dish, and pile the yellow inside.
